Is the United States winning the war on the Islamic State? Defying predictions by military leaders that the Islamic State would collapse within weeks, President Obama on Wednesday cited the recent liberation of the Iraqi city of Ramadi as proof that the extremist group could not be defeated. "We've made progress," he told reporters during a White House news conference, "but I would warn that the plan is not to be declared a winner on the ground by the summer." But experts and former officials agree that while Ramadi was a key victory, Islamic State militants have a long way to go before they are driven out of their caliphate in Iraq and Syria. The militants, whose strength swelled as they seized territory in northern and western Iraq, Raqqa, Syria, and parts of southern Turkey, remain a potent force, and they are being pushed back in some areas. "Ramadi did not mark the beginning of the end for ISIS," said Robin Wettman, a former senior State Department official. "The longer they remain in control of territory in Syria, the more the idea of a caliphate dissipates, and even in Iraq, the more they are showing themselves to be a hard nut to crack." In Ramadi, the United States and Iraqi security forces seized 40 miles of territory and retook the city. At least 400 militants — and an unknown number of civilians — were killed. But during the nearly six-month battle, the militants controlled more than 500 square miles in the center of the city, a far larger area than the 200 square miles occupied in 2013 by the Islamic State and their predecessor, al-Qaeda in Iraq, in and around Mosul. Despite American officials' insistence that the Islamic State was doomed by 2014, their predictions have proven wrong again and again as the militants have spread and adapted. Yet other analysts said that the renewed focus on Ramadi by Mr. Obama and other administration officials suggested that the United States might be losing the war. "My friend in the administration has every reason to be proud of his troops and what they have done. But that's no reason to get cocky," said Vincent H. Mayer, a scholar at George Mason University's Center for Security Studies who has written two books on the Islamic State. "This is really a war on terror," he added. "It's not an ordinary war

Q: Can I use the normal package manager to install npm modules? I've got a file called /myApp/node_modules/node.js I believe that node.js is installed via the normal package manager. How do I go about installing it via the package manager instead of downloading it via npm init? A: NPM (the tool, not a terminal command) can install via the package manager. To do so, first find the package: Open a terminal cd into your package directory (if you don't know where that is, then it's the /myApp/node_modules directory where you installed node.js) run npm search node (you can do this at any time) This will display a listing of all available package. Find the package you need and run npm install - the rest will work for you. Note that running npm search may take a while if you have a large package repository. Circulating immune complexes in malignant and benign diseases. Circulating immune complexes (CIC) were studied in the sera of 18 patients with malignant diseases and 35 patients with benign diseases, as well as in the sera of 61 normal control subjects. The Scatchard method with polyclonal rabbit antioglobulin serum in an immunofluorescent technique was used to study the binding of immune complexes to blood cells, as well as by the technique of agarose gel electrophoresis. In the patients with malignant diseases CIC's were present in 16 of the 18 sera as compared with only 1 of the 35 sera from patients with benign diseases and in 10 of the 61 sera from control subjects. The Scatchard plots showed curvilinear patterns in all the patients with malignant diseases. In the patients with benign diseases, CIC were present in only 3 of the 35 sera, and all Scatchard plots were parabolic. In the control sera CIC were present in 6 of the 61 sera. The presence of CIC in the sera of patients with malignant diseases was related to the type of the disease, most of which were associated with a non-specific inflammatory response. Allogeneic blood transfusions were carried out in the patients with malignant diseases, and the proportions of CIC increased in some cases. The presence of CIC in the sera of the patients with benign diseases was not significantly influenced by sex
