Simultaneous removal of ammonium and phosphorus from aqueous solutions by iron-modified magnetic mesoporous biochar through dual-stage magnetic separation. A new iron-modified magnetic mesoporous biochar (Fe-MMBC) for effective adsorption of both ammonium and phosphorus from aqueous solutions is prepared by grafting magnetic mesoporous biochar (MMB) with a layer of iron oxide. The effects of the operating parameters (e.g., pH and dose of adsorbent) on the removal of phosphorus and ammonium from water were investigated. Results show that the prepared Fe-MMBC exhibits an excellent adsorption capacity for both ammonium and phosphorus removal, which is superior to that of the pristine MMB. In addition, both adsorption capacity and removal percentage of MMB for ammonium and phosphorus are affected by the pH. The removal percentage of Fe-MMBC for phosphate decreased significantly in the pH range from 2.0 to 7.0, while that of ammonium increased gradually from 1.0 to 6.0. This result indicates that the adsorption of phosphorus by Fe-MMBC is pH-sensitive, whereas the adsorption of ammonium is pH-insensitive. The adsorption behavior can be well explained by the Langmuir isotherm. The adsorption of phosphate increased with increasing initial solution concentration, which can be attributed to the cooperative adsorption effect of  $\text{Ca}^{2+}$  and  $\text{PO}_4^{3-}$  on the surface of Fe-MMBC. The kinetic data of the adsorption processes of ammonium and phosphate can be well fitted to the pseudo-second-order model and the pseudo-first-order model, respectively. Thermodynamic analysis reveals that the adsorption of phosphate and ammonium on Fe-MMBC is spontaneous and exothermic. Furthermore, the surface area and the pore size distribution of Fe-MMBC significantly affected the adsorption capacity and removal percentage of ammonium and phosphate. The adsorption capacity and removal percentage of ammonium increased as the specific surface area and total pore volume increased. For phosphate adsorption, the decrease in total pore volume led to a decrease in the removal percentage and decrease in adsorption capacity. However, the removal percentage and adsorption capacity increased slightly as the specific surface area increased.

Watchdog goes for 180 days without Senate approval AP HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) -- Pennsylvania's top law enforcement official has been temporarily given more than $280,000 of taxpayer money to assist in an investigation of his own actions. The state police watchdog has been given legal authority to spend the money because of allegations he embezzled more than $70,000 while serving as a lieutenant with the state Bureau of Liquor Control Enforcement. Attorney General Josh Shapiro ordered the investigation last fall, just days before he was sworn in as attorney general. The order says the money was approved in October by then-Attorney General Kathleen Kane, and is being spent during the investigation's "discovery" phase. That includes reviewing documents and interviewing witnesses. It's unclear how much of the money has been spent. The order says police reports and email correspondence are being reviewed, but no interviews have been conducted. The money comes from the Attorney General's Office and is spent through the state police. Copyright 2013 The Associated Press. All rights reserved. recall all the places she's worked. In the years since she's changed jobs, however, she's been able to put together a solid portfolio. Her work experience has helped her to get some of the jobs she's held. The plain truth is that the "resume" isn't the main reason she gets hired. The background check is more important. And fortunately for Johnson, she said, she doesn't get many that ask about a "suspended" license. Johnson said, while she's been approved to serve as a church secretary, it's largely a ceremonial role. "I just basically be at the meetings when needed," she said. The church secretary position is what Johnson now holds. She and some close friends who were staying at Johnson's fiancé's house had returned home from a trip the evening of Dec. 27 when a storm passed through the area. Johnson said that when she went to her truck to go home, she realized that the truck's windshield was badly damaged from falling branches. After inspecting the truck and calling her father, Johnson said she realized
