"At Pacific Lutheran University, they're

Puget Sound's reputation as a national leader in community and public service attracted the attention of K-12 superintendent of public instruction Tom Torlakson, who identified Puget Sound as a great fit for his statewide program. instrumentation. Her children keep her grounded. You know how women with kids sometimes become completely consumed by parenting? Someone who always has a half-finished project lying around? You know someone who - four kids or less - spends more time at school than she does at home. Someone who is always on the go, wanting to do more than just watch the kids play, coming home from school and then setting about it with "you coming? No, let me finish this before you get here!" If you know someone like that, you'll know what I mean when I say this. I talk to one woman every week who is in the process of leaving her marriage. For years, she and her husband have been going through a divorce, but now they finally seem to have reached an agreed settlement. She's coming away with a house, a car and a lump of money. She's laid off from a job, but she's got enough money to pay for her own mortgage, her car and her bills. There's something in the air about her. She's not the usual woman worried about being a breadwinner and a house-keeper. She's focused on her own life. With God. She can finally start to think about the kids again. We were discussing how some of these women become mothering machines - filled with guilt and worry - while others find it easier to simply focus on their own lives. "If I don't have my nose in a book or my feet on a keyboard," she says, "I'm not really doing anything. God gives us many talents, but I've always felt that parenting was the one talent that I had. I never wanted to be that type of mother." She's talking about mothering as work, rather than something that comes naturally. "There are a lot of things that I don't understand, but I do understand that work gives me a purpose and makes me feel worthwhile." For those of you with a tendency to feel you're not worth something because you can't be
