What's new in Elden Ring:

It's a Dark Continent where life ends once. Elden lords. We live and work in this desert to the side of the Death God Gohda. We are the human Elden, those with power to live like gods. And our lives are violent. And our life spans are very short. And we take pride in ourselves for having found Gohda's power, and we are hunting for the legendary Lands Between, which is said to be the Elden's homeland. We are warfares. We bring down the gods. We are our fathers' children

OF COURSE MY NAME IS TARNISHED.

It's my first place of birth.

Gohda made me.

I was raised by the Hartris family, the same family that gave birth to the greatest warfare in the Elden history—the Thornguards. But one day, while I was harrying a nearby village, I cut off my horns, and was “cast away” by the Hartris family. I spent a couple of decades drifting in the desert, and eventually reached a settlement of travelers known as The Jades. They are a group of outstanding Elden with high-level magic ability who provide information and help save travelers in the desert.

I found a young Elden boy named Balidor and trained him. While our mutual affinity was a little different from normal, we were in harmony. I helped Balidor train the young knights of “The Knights of Liben,” and became one of their commanders. While I was training there, I met a young girl named Milgram. She was born in a different village, was also “cast away”, and went through a similar experience to me. I knew we had some connection with each other. But when her family died in an accident, she was turned away by her hometown. I decided to find her.

I wandered all around the desert, putting off my loneliness. This is how I met familiar faces of the Underworld. In the Underworld, I also found Milgram, who’s been walking the desert path for years. I was really moved.

Eventually, we returned together to The Jades. I began to chase after Milgram fantasy action RPG which is currently in development by a small team in the south of France.
